Band short of goal for Europe

"The public doesn't owe us a trip to Europe," according to Jack Snider, UNL professor of brass instruments and director of the Cornhusker Marching Band. The band is planning a trip to Europe, and it is short of its goal of raising half of the $150,000 tour cost.

Through donations, candy and fresh fruit sales, as well as other fund raising activities, the band has managed to accumulate $55,000. However, Snider said some band members still are having problems coming up with the average trip fee of $540.

Snider said no more fund raising activities are planned.

"We've nearly done everything—from raffing a car off to peddling popcorn through the dorms," he said.

"It's so important that we go," said band member Pat Bryant. "Europeans have never seen a marching band—we can be the first." Bryant said soccer fields would even have to be lined so formations could be performed on them.

"But if we don't have a large band representation, the Europeans will never get the chance to really see our drills," he added.

Snider said 175 band members will make the trip.

Besides five marching performances, the band's schedule will include two concerts.

Snider said he was disappointed there has not been the over-all response from state citizens that he anticipated, but the band will still make the trip. "Just Monday, I went down and paid for our air fares—so we're really going," he said. "But not without problems."

short stuff

Specialists on Latin American Studies will gather today and Friday to consider the topic "The Interrelations of Culture, Technology and Development in Latin America" in a symposium sponsored by the UNL Institute for International Studies.

Events today include two speeches, "Culture and Technology" at 9:30 a.m., by German Acciniegas, Colombian Ambassador to Italy and Venezuela and "Humanism and Technology", at 1:30 p.m. by Vianna Moog, of the Conselho Federal de Cultura in Brazil.

The final major presentation will be Friday at 9 a.m. on "Culture and Technology," presented by Donald M. Dozer of the University of California at Santa Barbara.

Panel discussions will supplement the presentations.

Events are in the Nebraska Union Centennial Room.
