

UNO election appealed

A UNO "Watergate" may leave that campus without a newly elected student body government this fall, according to Student Body Vice President Kristen Grady.

Charges of voter harrassment, excessive campaign expenditures and poll workers being too close to voting places have caused one UNO election to be thrown out and the second also to be contested, Grady said at a Student Advisory Board meeting with the regents.

She said Greg Blodig, as president, and Marsha Babcock, as vice president, were elected in March 3 elections to head the UNO student government. Two of the losing slates appealed to the UNO Election Commission.

Blodig also appealed and won. The two slates then took their charges to the student court with Blodig appealing the court's decision to disqualify his slate.

The court voted against Blodig's appeal, threw out the election results and ordered new elections. Those were held Thursday and Friday, but ballots were impounded before they could be counted, at the request of UNO's Council on Student Affairs (CSA). CSA is similar to UNL's Council on Student Life.

CSA made the request to the UNO chancellor because it questioned whether the student court legally could call for new elections.

Grady said that, according to UNO's student body constitution, senators are to be elected two weeks after officer elections. UNO has 2½ weeks of school left.

If both elections are declared invalid, there will not be the necessary two weeks between officer and senator elections, Grady said.

She noted that if it is too late to elect senators, this year's government would continue as the government next fall.

It's graduation day-plus one. Now what are you going to do?

You've been programmed since you were 5 years old for what happened yesterday—now how about tomorrow?

You may want to consider Today's Army. Some of your fellow graduates are. You can match your skills to your education—and once you've proven your skills you can advance quickly in pay and responsibility. You choose your own length of enlistment—2, 3 or 4 years—it's not a lifetime commitment.

And when you come out of the Army you'll have a first-rate scholarship—the G.I. Bill—to continue your education if you wish.

Talk us over with your placement counselor or phone toll free 800-523-4800.
