"It's not proper to allow alcohol at social gatherings off campus, then prohibit it on campus," he said. However, "there would be management problems because of the students who are not 19-years-old" if liquor were permitted.

Reddish, age 50, is an attorney who has served on the Alliance Board of Education. He was graduated from NU in 1945.

—Robert Simmons Jr. of Scottsbluff suggested the current board "has been too free in letting the University administration do as it pleases."

If elected, Simmons said he would attempt to "give more policy making power to the board and increase the public exposure of the board."

Simmons, currently Banner County attorney, claimed "it is up to the Legislature" to decide the alcohol question. It is not a proper regents' concern," he said.

"I would not recommend that the Legislature treat the University differently than any other state property," he continued.

"I'm not sure that the Daily Nebraskan or student government should be supported by student fees," he said.

Simmons received a law degree from the University in 1939 and formerly served for six years on the State Board of Education.

—Don Steen of Morrill said that during his campaign he plans to sit in on classes at UNL and talk with students about their concerns.

"Every regent should do this," he said. "I don't think students' opinions are being sought by the board now."

Conversations with former Campus Security policemen convinced Steen that liquor on campus could cause problems. He said he opposed permitting liquor on campus because of "the cost of adding more men to the campus police force to handle the added problems.

"Some fees are justified and others are not," he continued. "I don't think students should have to support the Daily Nebraskan, for example, if they don't want to."

Steen currently is a feed company president who was graduated from NU in 1941.

—Frank Kleager, a Scottsbluff insurance salesman, said he "would attempt to find out what students and the people in District Six want by conducting an open forum."

"There are regents on the board now who have acted as individuals instead of as representatives of their constituents," he said.

He said he opposes any attempt to legalize liquor on campus. Kleager has been a past member of the State Board of Vocational Community Technical Colleges.

—Regent Robert Raun of Minden said he is running for re-election to the Seventh District seat because he has been a regent for nine years and would "like to see more changes come about."

When asked if he thought students oriented issues, including liberalized visitation policies and consumption of liquor on campus, were issues that should be decided by campus administrators, Raun said, "I don't think the administration speaks for the taxpayers.

"My constituents are very concerned about these kinds of things," he said. "I will continue to vote down any attempt to allow liquor. It does not contribute to an education situation."

—North Platte attorney Harold Kay, who is running against incumbent Raun, suggested that "something must be done to make dormitories more attractive to students" because of the declining occupancy rate.

He said liberalizing visitation policies and selling alcohol in the Nebraska Union both would "make dormitories easier to live in." Kay added that he was not in favor of allowing liquor in dormitories and Greek houses.

Kay, one of the founder of North Platte Junior College, said declining enrollment, which he contends will drop even lower during the next 10 years, "indicates to me that the regents should undertake a long-range study of the curriculum to make sure the right programs are eliminated if need be."

He also said the current academic standard must be upgraded. "NU is close to the bottom of the Big 8 in education," he said.

Kay was graduated from NU with a law degree in 1949.

—UNL student Fred Grady, Raun's other challenger from the Seventh District, proposed a visitation program that goes beyond recommendations endorsed by UNL administrators in the Differentiated Housing Report. He suggested four different groups of living units, each with different rules on visitation and alcohol, could be established.

"I don't think the board is doing its job of maintaining high standards of education at NU," he said. Regents should grant larger pay increases in order to retain NU faculty members and to bring pay standards up to those of other Big 8 schools, he said.

WHAT'S MORE IMPORTANT THAN YOUR GLASSES.

YOUR SUNGLASSES.
