Regents comment on division of UHC

When asked about their decision to support UNL Chancellor James Zumberge's reorganization plans for the University Health Center (UHC), one regent declined comment, another declared continued dissatisfaction with the problem, and a third defended the administration's policy in interviews this week.

With regents Camille Elliott and Ed Schwartzkopf dissenting, the board voted Saturday to support Zumberge's plan to divide the center into the Nebraska Center for Health Education and the University Health Center.

Elliott, in her first session as regent, declined to comment on the reason for her vote.

"I would rather not say why I failed to support it, but I will continue to do so," she said.

Schwartzkopf said he voted "not against the plan, but because I was seeking some solution to the problem."

Schwartzkopf said he questioned the policy of dividing the center without asking "outside expertise" to look into the national scene to "see how the plan would fit in with the federal health plans now pending before Congress."

Regent Robert Prokop, named by some of the physicians in UHC as one of the Regents who is "out to get" UHC director, Dr. Samuel Fuenning, said Tuesday that "no one regent can go out and get anybody."

Prokop refused to comment on the assertions made by UHC physicians that he is involved in the matter.

He voted for the reorganization of the center because "under the circumstances, Zumberge has the authority to make such decisions," he said.
