

Student fees distribution rankles campus groups

"We're the only spirit group on campus for athletics," he said. "We do more than just go to football games," he said, pointing to Corn Cobs' work on recognition for the minor sports.

Morrison said the Corn Cobs decision was based on the group's "mostly social" budget, and on the belief that the Athletic Dept. would be a more appropriate source of funds.

Concern for the minor sports was also expressed by Art Thompson, advisor to the Rowing Team. However, he said he was "very happy" about the $2,475 earmarked for a new shell, which was recommended for his group.

Thompson, also Assistant Director for Programs at the Nebraska Union, was not so pleased over the $50,000 allotted the Union, but union director Al Bennett did not complain about the $20,000 reduction from the Union's request.

"We tried to challenge it and we failed," Bennet said. "Now we'll just proceed with the available funds and with no further comment. We need to get on with the task, and there's no time for griping."

The Student Bar Association also tried to appeal the Fee Allocation Board's decision not to fund the SBA Minority Recruitment program. Brian Waid, SBA president, said he disagreed with the board's rationale for the recommendation.

Baker, who is a law student, said the board had "agonized over that decision."

"We felt the program to be very worthwhile," he said, "but we finally determined that recruitment for an academic department was not an appropriate use of fees."

But, "the program is much broader than just recruiting," Waid said, "and we were not given an opportunity to explain that to the board." Waid had not yet been notified if the appeal was being considered.

Baker and Morrison said that, of the two groups funded in full, the board was most impressed with the budget presented by the University Child Care Project. (The Daily Nebraskan funding was predicated on a promised drop of at least 25% in funds within two years.)

Morrison said the Child Care budget was "very well thought out," and that some of the items presented were non-recurring costs, such as building improvement to meet fire inspections.

Mary Joe Ryan, director of the project, said she was quite pleased with the recommendation.

"They (the board) seem to be a very fair group," she said.

Cager's future probed

The University of Nebraska Sports Information Department has published the Nebraska Basketball Outlook for 1974-75.

In this publication junior Jerry Fort is mentioned as one of the main strong points of the team. Fort, a guard, led Nebraska in scoring during the 1973-74 season with an average of 18 points per game.

Other potentially strong players, according to the pamphlet, include sophomores Bob Siegel (forward), Rickey Harris (center), Mark Enright (forward) and Ron Taylor (center). Juniors include Ricky Marsh (guard) and Larry Cox (center). Seniors Steve Erwin (forward) and Kent Reckewey (guard) will also be on the team.

In the pamphlet head coach Joe Cipriano is quoted as saying "The Husker's three main problems are leadership, finding a bona fide forward and creating an offense."

Two of the most promising recruits to the team are mentioned as Ernie Martin, from Denver Community College and Steve Willis of North Idaho Junior College. Martin, according to the pamphlet, will be a prime candidate for Brendy Lee's forward position. Willis may succeed in filling the guard spot vacated by Tom Novak.

Nebraska film series readied for citizens

"Nebraska for the People" is the title for a three-part color film produced to help Nebraskans learn more about the working of their state government.

The film is a cooperative venture of State Government, the Nebraska ETV Network and the University of Nebraska-Lincoln. It has been financed by the state, filmed by NETV and is being distributed by the University's Instructional Media Center.

The film series is available to clubs, schools, churches or individuals. The only cost is return postage.

State Senator Richard Maresh of Milligan was the introducer of a bill that was passed in 1972 providing support for the film project. Floyd Kalber, a network newsman with Nebraska ties was selected to be narrator. The series was written by Dick Herman, a veteran Nebraska statehouse reporter, and filming was done by NETV. The Instructional Media Center has had 90 prints of the film made and is handling distribution.

"We hope everyone in the state can see these films," said Dr. Jim Buterbaugh of the Instructional Media Center. "They bring the history and operations of the legislative, executive and judicial branches into clear perspective. They give us examples of day-to-day governmental services and of intergovernmental cooperation such as the use of University of Nebraska computers in speeding up the bill drafting process."

The first film in the series, "The Legislative Branch" is 33 minutes long and tells of the evolution of the nation's only one-house legislature. It also follows the legislative process from introduction to passage.

Part 2, "The Executive Branch", is 23 minutes and examines the power and responsibility of the governor. Also considered are some of the activities of state agencies.

Many Nebraskans will get their first glimpse of a state supreme court hearing in Part 3, "The Judicial Branch". This 20-minute segment examines the functions of the district and county courts in the unified court system. Supreme Court Chief Justice Paul W. White comments on the impact of the judiciary on the lives of Nebraskans.

An appropriation from the legislature has been made to help support distribution of the films. Persons interested in showing them can get prints by contacting the Instructional Media Center, University of Nebraska-Lincoln, 68508.

Prof. chosen for workshop

Dr. Robert G. Fuller, associate professor of physics at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, has been selected to serve as a member of the planning committee for a national workshop on intellectual development for the teachers of high school and college physics.

The goal of the workshop is to make teachers of high school and college physics aware of the work of Jean Piaget and others concerning the thinking strategies used by many high school and college students. The workshop is a project of the American Association of Physics Teachers and receives support from the National Science Foundation.

A workshop planning committee has been formed that will plan and conduct a workshop on intellectual development at the AAPT annual meeting on January 27-30 in Anaheim, Calif.
