

Pioneer experience relived at Stuhr Workshop

Photos by
Lucy Lien

At the Stuhr Museum in Grand Island students in the Pioneer Workshop spent a week living in a log cabin and cooking off an old stove. Shown in the pictures are, starting on the top right and moving clockwise: Mary McBride from Blue Hill, a sophomore majoring in business at UN-L, looks at old jewelry in one of the old houses at the museum.

Getting food out of the ice house are Larry Griffing (left), a sophomore majoring in art at UN-L, and Mary Wilson, a junior at UN-L majoring in criminal justice.

Roger Welsch, instructor of the workshop (right) lectures his class outside.

Cooking over the old stove is Lynn Ireland, who majored in French at Nebraska Wesleyan and plans to get her masters in folklore in New York.

Looking at an old hearth are (from left), guide, Anita Glenn from Fairbury, and Jan Hicks, junior from Lincoln majoring in home economics at UN-L.

Pumping the water used for washing during the workshop is Bob Pierce, graduate assistant in the English Department at UN-L, and co-instructor of the workshop.