Council defines education

Coordination of post-secondary education should increase options to Nebraska high school seniors and insure those options to them no matter what the student's age or financial status.

So concluded the Nebraska Coordinating Council for Post secondary Education in its summer work, the council's chairman said.

Jim O'Hanlon, also Coordinator for Freshman Programming at UNL, said the council is defining proper post-secondary education and will later decide if it's available in Nebraska.

The council is a study board appointed by Gov. J.J. Exon. It is financed with a federal Health, Education and Welfare Dept. grant.

Its purpose is to define what post-secondary coordination is necessary, if Nebraska's is adequate, and if not, what to do about it.

Nebraska is one of three states in the United States without a permanent post-secondary education coordinating board, O'Hanlon said.

Post-secondary education in the state is managed by the state Board of Technical Community Colleges, State College Board and NU Board of Regents.

Most states have one board for all, or one over all, he said.

The study council is unique because it includes profit-making programs such as cosmetology and barber schools, clerical training programs, and independent colleges, he said.

Council members represent citizens, NU, state colleges, independent colleges, private profit-making programs and students.

The council will probably report its recommendations to the governor at the end of this year, O'Hanlon said.

It has already released its statement on what it agrees coordination should do. The list includes:

- Share resources among the programs;
- Ease student transfers from one program to another;
- Provide a common information base for seniors deciding on an education and career;
- Save money;
- Diversify education programs and expand options; and
- Provide a responsiveness to changing state needs.

The Legislature's Education Committee is also studying post-secondary education, O'Hanlon said:
