Omaha WFL team possible?

Tuesday night in Omaha, former Husker football star Johnny Rodgers said at a sports luncheon that plans were brewing for an Omaha-based World Football League (WFL) franchise. Rodgers claimed the team would consist of former Nebraska players.

Rodgers also hinted the proposed team would benefit from the appointment of an established coach. Naturally, that was interpreted to mean Bob Devaney.

Could such a team make it in the WFL? It's possible, but there would have to be a lot of slick talking and dollar-waving before Rodgers or Jerry Tagge or Rich Glover would sign contracts.

Would Omahans support this team? I think so. It would be the city's first truly professional team (nobody considers the Mustangs or the Royals to be pros).

Of course, not even the wildest optimist could expect western Nebraskans to journey cross-state dressed in purple or green or whatever the team colors would be. But even if just a reasonable amount of Omahans attended, the games could draw 40,000 people.

That brings us the subject of where they would play. Suggesting Rosenblatt Stadium or UNO field would only draw a laugh from WFL bigwigs. But remember, construction of a Riverfront Stadium should start sometime in the future.

The key to success for this Omaha team would be the recruiting of former Husker players. It could take a lot of convincing to get Jerry Tagge to leave his starting quarterback role at Green Bay, but he might do it if the price is right.

Johnny Rodgers might be willing to play in a city where he can speak English. Just think, if even one eighth of the Husker stars of the past ten years could be rounded up, Omaha would have an NFL-caliber team.

With all that talent available, all that's needed is some Omaha tycoon willing to pay the franchise price and we'll be in business. Of course, if the venture falls through this tycoon might soon be out of business... but life is full of risks.

Who would ever have thought Green Bay would make it as a pro football city?

Dear Mr. Taylor,

I was utterly disgusted with your Big 8 predictions of Aug 26th. Picking Oklahoma to win really ticked me off. How could you do it?

There is no way the Sooners will beat us again this year. We have almost everybody coming back and a couple of good young players who might step in. We have the best quarterback in the nation with David Humm.

Oklahoma lost most of its defense and their starting fullback was kicked off the team. In fact, a lot of Big 8 schools are booting off kids because of drugs and stealing. You don't see that happen at Nebraska.

I predict the Huskers will win the national championship this year. Oklahoma will lose at least three games. I'll go one step further. If Oklahoma beats Nebraska this year, I'll eat my GO BIG RED shirt at the Union water fountain the day after the game.

Disrespectfully,
Nick Delaney
