Harriers praise UNL team

Two of UNL's cross country runners said they think Nebraska's track program shouldn't be taken for granted.

Keith Whitaker and Harold Stelzer, who are from Massachusetts and received UNL athletic scholarships, said they can't believe the difference in team attitude and organization here as compared with team attitude and organization in Boston.

"It's more serious out here," Stelzer said. "Back east we had trouble with starting times and organization."

Whitaker, a sophomore and the only returning letterman on the cross country team, added that the program is much bigger at Nebraska.

"The people are more friendly here too," he said.

In addition to distance running, Whitaker and Stelzer are working out as potential milers for spring track.

"There's not much spare time," they said. Both said they run an average of 15 miles each day, divided between two running sessions. The first session is at 6:30 a.m. before class and the second usually begins at 2:30 in the afternoon, they said.

Whitaker, majoring in business administration, said he likes the university and thinks it has a lot to offer.

Stelzer, a freshman majoring in criminal justice said he hasn't been at the university long enough to judge its academic program.

Both runners said they were influenced to come to Nebraska by Peter Scott, a former Nebraskan who set UNL's half-mile record. Scott, now in Massachusetts, worked with Stelzer and Whitaker when they were high school runners.

Commenting on this year's cross country team Whitaker said, "We are rebuilding right now. We've got a good crop of freshmen and there's more desire this year. You get out of it what you put into it."

Colorado and Kansas will be tough competitors, he said.
