Debbie Kempton, a Bellevue freshman in NROTC, said women's social lives do not center around the ROTC program. She said NROTC does not take much time out of her school activities.

There were complaints about uniforms from two AROTC cadets.

One AROTC cadet, who preferred to remain anonymous, said she did not like the appearance of the "weird" uniforms.

Margie Dennis, a sophomore AROTC cadet, complained that her fatigues did not fit.

The problem of ill-fitting uniforms bother NROTC, too, Capt. W. R. Thomas, commanding officer of NROTC, said. With more women going into the Navy it is harder to promptly fill orders for women's uniforms, he said.

Women are expected to perform the same duties as men in ROTC programs, Yim said. Only certain exercises have been changed for women, for instance, women do not have to do chin-ups or sit-ups in AROTC, he said.

AROTC classes are the same as any other classes at UNL. Deb Goodrich, a freshman, said. Instructors lecture students on such subjects as military history and cadets are encouraged to give their opinions, she said.

Nine women have enrolled in AROTC this year, making a total of 16, Yim said. AFROTC has also had nine women enroll with 11 total according to Juister. Thomas said in its initial year NROTC has had four women enroll.
