UPI report wrong

No influenza scare

A recent United Press International (UPI) report that a new, deadly influenza strain will hit much of the United States this winter is unsubstantiated, according to the U.S. Center for Disease Control (CDC) at Atlanta, Ga.

In a telegram to Dr. Paul A. Stoesz, director of disease control at the Nebraska State Health Dept., a CDC doctor said the UPI story released Wednesday was incorrect.

UPI had reported that the Port Chalmers flu, a Type A strain similar to the London flu which swept the United States in late 1972 and early 1973, was unexpected in all parts of the country except the Mid-Atlantic and Northeast regions.

The CDC telegram said "influenza will occur in the U.S. this season caused by a strain similar to the Port Chalmers strain. How much and where influenza will occur is obviously not known to anyone.

"It is possible that an influenza will affect certain geographical regions enough to cause excess mortality, however a widespread national epidemic has not been predicted."

Stoesz said that influenza is a viral disease of two types, A and B. Type A usually affects people 65 years of age and older more severely, causing a higher fatality rate because complications are worse. Type B usually affects children where the fatality rate is low because of fewer complications in healthy individuals.

Stoesz recommends that students get flu shots between now and mid-November as a precautionary measure, because once the flu season begins, usually in late winter, it's too late to be vaccinated.

Dr. Ken Hubbel of the University Health Center (UHC) suggests that students with physical disabilities, including lung or heart disease, or people who handle food or are exposed to people with colds should get flu shots.

Students may be vaccinated for influenza at either the health center or by a private physician. Vaccination at UHC costs $3 and uses a general vaccine which will help build resistance against several types of influenza, Hubbel said.

WHY COMMIT YOURSELF TO THE PRIESTHOOD?

Why be a priest? Certainly, in times as difficult as these we live in, being a priest is a lot harder today than it was in years past.

And committing oneself to anything for any amount of time seems to be one of the conflicts of our modern age. But the priesthood is a challenge. A big one.

Today, more than ever before in history, men and women, young and old, are searching for religious meaning, for withdrawal from isolation and alienation to joyful community experiences, for Good News in the midst of discouragement and hope in the place of pessimism.

The Paulists are trying to minister to these needs. As a contemporary religious community serving the American people, our mission is to communicate the love of Christ to people.

Every Paulist is a missionary: in the pulpit or the parish house . . . on campus or in the inner-city . . . with the spoken or the printed word . . . he is communicating to people. His mission is to all of America. His message is love; the love of Christ for all people.

It isn't easy but the Paulist welcomes commitment. Welcomes the challenge. If you are interested in the Paulist way of life, send for the Paulist Papers.
