

Huskers' scout squad masters Big 8 offenses

Constant execution of every offensive set-up in the Big 8 is the game plan for the UNL football team's scout squad, according to its director, Randy Borg, former Husker defensive back.

By the end of the season, this 13 member offensive team will have mastered every play of every opponent the Big Red defense has faced. "Too bad these guys can't play."

Scout squad membership is limited strictly to redshirts, ineligible players and transfers, players that, hopefully, will be the core of Nebraska's offense in future seasons.

The primary task of the scout squad is to perfect the offensive plays of Nebraska's next opponent and prepare the defense for the game. Scrimmages are held each day with the blackshirts facing the scout squad. The squad's execution of the plays is a big factor in the showing the Husker defense will make in the actual game.

Borg offered job

Borg, cut from the Washington Redskins in August, drove nonstop to Lincoln just in time to make it back for pre-registration. Upon entering the university, he was offered the job by head coach Tom Osborne.

Borg, works under defensive coordinator Monte Kiffin. Borg, a zoology major, said he is thinking about trying to get in the World Football League next year.

Borg said he was pleased with the ley, Calif. and Omaha redshirt Ed Burns are primary quarterbacks for the squad. Ferragamo is a passing quarterback and Burns has been tabbed as a good runner. They trade off directing the squad, depending upon the style of the opposing quarterback. "If he's a runner, Burns executes the plays, Borg explained. "If he's a thrower, Ferragamo does."

Tough year mentally

"The guys take extreme pride in what they do, he continued. "If the defense has a bad game, they feel it is a bad reflection on them. When the defense has a good game, they know they did their job right."

The scout squad does not suit up for any games or travel with the team. Borg emphasized that it is mentally a tough year for squad members, but it prepares them for the time when they will get an opportunity to play.

People don't realize that it is the scout squad which helps the Husker blackshirts maintain their excellence, Borg said.

Humm ready for Kansas game

By Pete Wegman

Nebraska quarterback Dave Humm Wednesday declared himself "100 per cent ready" for Saturday's contest against the University of Kansas in Lawrence.

Speculation had arisen about after-effects of Humm's being knocked unconscious during Nebraska's 21-10 loss to Missouri last Saturday. The injury came in the third quarter on an option play.

Humm said he can't remember what actually happened, except that "the second half I only remembered the bad plays of the first half." He said that, although disoriented, he was fine after the game.

Despite his injury in the Missouri game and a hip injury he received at Wisconsin on a running play, Humm said he believes the quarterback must run.

Heisman Trophy candidate

During the preseason, Humm frequently was mentioned as a Heisman Trophy candidate. Concerning Nebraska's 3-2 record, no televised Cornhusker games remaining this season, and his two injuries, Humm said he did not think his chances for the award have diminished.

He said it is too early in the season to pick one outstanding candidate for the trophy.

"At the beginning of the year, every team has a candidate," he said, adding that team considerations will come before any individual awards.

Numerous Nebraska fans have complained that the Cornhusker offense is too predictable with a few "trick plays." Humm said he disagrees, and pointed out that the offense has consistently piled up large yardage totals.

Nebraska will stay with its basic offense for the Kansas game, with a few new plays added, as is typical for each game, he said.

Three different formations

"We won't really know what we'll do against Kansas until we're into the game. We try to have picked plays for our first two possessions before the game." He added that Nebraska will use three different formations during the first offensive possession to get the feel of the KU defense.

Humm said he envisions a tough Big 8 schedule ahead, especially with the present 3-2 record, but said, "the people on this team are not going to quit. We're going to get back together."
