University Health Center

Ombudsman handles complaints

Students may voice complaints about University Health Center (UHC) personnel and policies to a retired doctor, now UHC Ombudsman.

Dr. Paul Bancroft, retired five years, said he was asked to be UHC ombudsman three years ago by Dr. Sam Fuenning, then UHC director. Bancroft worked as ombudsman for the Lancaster County Medical Society and the Nebraska State Medical Society for five years before becoming UHC ombudsman.

One question frequently asked is why the UHC does not dispense free contraceptives, he said.

Bancroft said contraceptives are not prescribed for medical reasons as well as for the patient's emotional stability. He said for some women, contraceptives may be injurious to their health.

Bancroft said about 50 per cent of the complaints he hears are about fees charged students for laboratory work and tests.

He also hears complaints from students having to wait to see a doctor, despite having made an appointment. He explained that doctors are often called to handle an emergency case, which sets them behind in their schedule. UHC doctors are on a rotating schedule for handling emergency cases to eliminate appointment conflicts, Bancroft said.

He also hears complaints stemming from personality clashes between patient and doctor, but in those cases he can only advise the student to see a different doctor, Bancroft said.

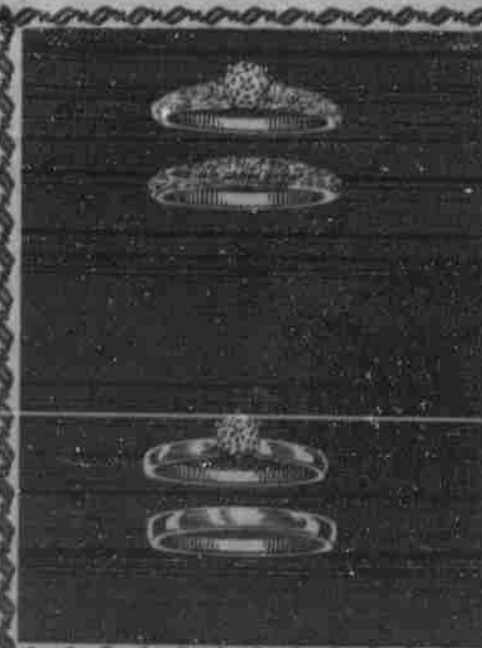

In addition to hearing complaints from students, Bancroft also has complaints referred to him by the University ombudsman, the UHC director and the UHC Student Advisory Board.

Bancroft said he does not know the number of complaints he has handled in his three years as ombudsman, but he estimated that he reviews three or four complaints a month.
