Candidates talk about ideas and apathy

Kay, 47, said people should have a choice in their regents selection this year. He said some board members are elected and "stay on and on."

"We need new ideas and fresh approaches. If they haven't been implemented by now, they won't be," he said.

Kay has served on the advisory council of the Nebraska Association of Technical Community Colleges and is now legal counsel for North Platte Public Schools and the Mid-Plains Technical Community College Area.

Kay voiced concern over what he called a lack of coordination between NU and other state or junior colleges. He said when students transfer between various Nebraska colleges, they lose credits, are forced to overlap their curriculums and delay their education.

Education number one

"NU should be number one in education as well as football," he said. He hopes for the establishment of a board of coordination to improve communications between NU and out-state colleges. Kay suggested sending advisors from NU outstate to tell high school students what to expect at the university.

Kay said he is attempting to go to the people this election and find out what they want. But he voiced disappointment at the apathy he said he is encountering.

"The vast majority don't even know who their regent is," he said.

Raun, the incumbent, said he agreed most people are not aware of the identity of their regents. But he said when people are satisfied, they don't need to contact their regents and subsequently don't know who they are.

Farming sector

Raun, 46, a farmer, said since agriculture is vital to Nebraska, the farming sector needs representation.

"If I'm not elected there won't be a farmer on the board," he said.

Raun was appointed to fill an unexpired regent term and was elected to a six-year term in 1968. He said he is running on his 9-year record.

Both Raun and Kay said Nebraska need some type of arrangement to train veterinary students. Although they agree an NU School of Veterinary Medicine would be too costly, they see the possibility for a regional school between several states.
