Walk-ons bolster team

What team can suit up 135 players for a home football contest, play 90 of them, and yet not have enough participants to constitute a freshman team? Try the University of Oklahoma.

Or, consider a team taking the incentive to cancel a regularly scheduled season contest three days before it is to be played. Ask the University of Colorado head coach (Bill Mallory) the motive behind that one.

These questions, along with several others, are being pondered by Cornhusker freshman football coach Jim Ross, his staff and the entire UNL freshman football team.

Earlier in the season, Big 8 opponents Missouri and Oklahoma also cancelled their game commitments with the first year Huskers.

Colorado cited lack of players as their reason for cancellation.

"We may not play any Big 8 games if the contracts are no more binding than this," Nebraska head coach Tom Osborne said. "Maybe we'll play junior colleges, four-year colleges or junior varsities of colleges around here."

Nebraska's freshman team consists of 44 players: two units of equally talented football players, according to assistant freshman coach, Pat Fischer. Fischer said the main reason Nebraska has such a complete freshmen football program is the power of UNL's walk-on program.

"We have more walk-ons than any other school in the Big 8," he said.

Fischer mentioned that the Huskers have more and more walk-ons each year. The 30 scholarship limitation rule is one cause of that, he added.

Besides an increasing number of non-scholarship recruits, Fischer said, "our drop out rate is almost nil." Seventy potential Huskers were listed as walk-ons this year.

The first year Huskers have played two games. They won their opener against Kansas State, 24-10. Their second win came against UNO in a close 6-0 contest.

Hopefully, the freshmen still have one game to play, a Nov. 11 meeting with Iowa State in Ames. It was originally planned for Nov. 8, but was shifted on Iowa State's request.

What are you going to be doing after graduation?

A position as a Navy Pilot, Flight Officer, or Nuclear Power Officer can be an exciting and challenging career.
