Watergate has effects

Democrats get help at the polls

By Steve Taylor

Political observers wondering about the effect of Watergate on the voting public got their answer Tuesday night in the form of widespread Democratic gains in the national elections.

In the House alone, Democrats appeared at 2 a.m. to have gained over 50 seats, giving them what may be a veto-proof majority of 295 representatives. The number of Republicans in the House was reduced to 140 out of the total 435 representatives in the House.

A few of the Republican victims included men who had been staunch backers of former President Richard Nixon during the Watergate scandal.

Sen. Earl Landgreebe, (R. Ind.) became the first Republican senatorial candidate to lose in Indiana in 42 years.

Right up to the day of Nixon's resignation, Landgreebe had vigorously defended the chief executive.

"Don't confuse me with the facts," he commented during the judiciary hearings. "I've got a closed mind and I'm going to stick with the President even if both of us have to be taken out of this building and be shot."

A member of the House Judiciary Committee who was unseated Tuesday night was Rep. Charles Sandman, (R. New Jersey.)

Sandman, perhaps the most outspoken Nixon defender on the committee, commented on his defeat: "I didn't think the Watergate thing would carry so far but it did and there was nothing I could do about it."
