Retailers in Union?

According to three UNL policymakers, more businesses in the Nebraska Union would benefit students if the businesses provided a service.

A proposal calling for remodeling the southwest corner of the Union for retailers will be formally acted on at Thursday's Union Board meeting. The Union Board, a 13-member student and faculty advisory committee, has not yet negotiated with any businesses to rent Union space, Union Director Allen Bennett said.

UNL Chancellor James Zumberge said, "When there is a service that students need, the Union should provide it," but he said he was against turning the Union into a "shopping center."

Vice Chancellor for Student Affairs Ken Bader said more businesses should be allowed in the Union only if they provide services at a cheaper cost than what the Union could provide.

Citing the Gateway Bank as providing a service, Bader and Regent Edward Schwartzkopf said they thought students would patronize Union stores if the businesses sold articles and services students needed.

Some people however, have doubts about bringing more businesses to the Union. ASUN President Ron Clingenpeel, speaking at the Oct. 29 ASUN Senate meeting, said "bringing businesses into the Union could jeopardize (student) organizations contained in the areas marked for business."

The Union Program Office, the Women's Resource Center and the study lounge would be affected by the proposal to bring more businesses into the Union.

"If we eliminate meeting rooms for (student) organizations, I hope we will provide other rooms with better facilities," Schwartzkopf said.

"The only organizations affected are those on the first floor and these can be moved somewhere else in the Union," Bader said.
