

Baha'i faith explored at meeting

The Baha'i Assoc., a student group organized to promote the ideas of the Baha'i world faith, will sponsor a display, film and speakers in the Nebraska Union Thursday at 7:30 p.m.

Marsha Mather, a member of the association, will speak, followed by a CBS film entitled "And His Name Shall Be One," and an informal question and answer period.

Linda Meyer, secretary of the club, said there was no problem in reserving the room in the Union, because "it won't be a religious worship service, it will be an information night for people interested in finding out about the Baha'i faith."

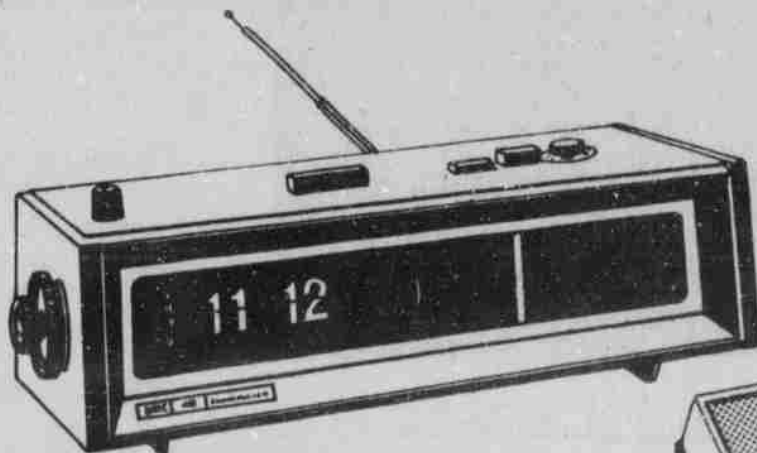

According to NU Board of Regents policy, religious groups may not use University property to promote any one religious belief.

The policy does allow discussion groups, religion in course study and within private quarters on campus and moments of nonsectarian silent meditation at University functions.

This presentation will be the first in a series of meetings conducted to inform people of the Baha'i faith and will run in conjunction with Monday meetings also conducted at 7:30 p.m. in the Union, Meyer said.
