Women/Speak '74

Poetry ends series

The Women/Speak '74 series concluded Wednesday with the topic "Woman as Poet." UNL students Robin Davis, Debra Hulbert, Lynn Silhasek, Nancy McCleery and Susan Rae Miller gave readings of their poetry.

Subjects for the poems read ranged from anger, love, fantasy, unhappiness, old age, to landfills, poems written to "ideas for poems that never developed," dactyl and Pocatello, Idaho.

Robin Davis read a poem she wrote about a commercial she never saw, but said she heard a lot about:

"Why do I always miss Jane Russell in her
thousand hour bra,
visiting main street,
Merna, Nebraska.
The commercial with a
million flaming batons, twirled by young girls
with good thighs
in red sequined suits
and hollow heels
for health reasons.

Jane Russell, packed in a dress.
An ex-star stacked in a mess.
The eighty-year-old profile
we know and love, and flattering? You tell me."
Susan Miller says she likes to write "portraits of people."

The following poem, "Charlie from Alaska", is by Miller:

"I'd like to draw him
but I would rather tell

I wasn't stupid
I was just dreaming
said Charles Horton III slight beard and overalls was going to bike cross-somewhere he's new here

he's from cold hunting hills he says he likes our cool brown crumbly fall trees and flat

dirt road filed
when he plays his 12-strings he sounds like bells"

Women/Speak '75 is scheduled to begin Jan. 21 at noon.
