

Book delivery

New library service

Library books located in an East Campus library will now be delivered to a City Campus library for City Campus students, and vice versa, Dean Waddel, associate dean of libraries, said Tuesday.

Waddel said the new service was instituted so students could utilize the entire UNL library system.

The number of UNL library volumes outgrew Love Library several years ago, Waddel said, causing personnel to transfer certain topics to other buildings on both campuses.

The three locations of these books are Love Library, Nebraska Hall, and the C.Y. Thompson Library on East Campus. Books relating to certain fields are also located in special interest libraries on campus.

Waddel said the service was formerly available to faculty members, but is now available to any UNL student. The only books allowed to be delivered through the service are those normally circulated, he said, not including reserve and rare books and periodicals.

Books at one City Campus library will not be delivered to another City Campus library either, he said.

Although Love Library is the only location having a complete card catalogue on all books in the UNL Library system, East Campus students may see if the book they need is in the system by calling the Love Library information desk, 472-2518.

To use the delivery service, students should go to the library where they would like the book delivered and complete a borrower's card.

For City Campus students to have a book delivered from East Campus by 1 p.m., they should fill out a card on a previous day or by 8 a.m. that day. For East Campus students to have a book delivered from City Campus by 1 p.m., they should fill out a card by 2 p.m. of the previous day.

A student can renew the book at the library where he received it, and they will have the book renewed at the other library.

Waddel said the new service is expected to become even more important when the inflation situation becomes crucial and less money may be available for purchase of new or duplicate books. A single title related to overlapping programs on both campuses can be easily accessible to any student, if available.
