Dorm adds new fitness center

By Randy Wright

Returning from a hard day at classes, next semester's Abel-Sandoz residents will be able to treat themselves to a workout followed by a sauna in the residence hall's new fitness learning center, according to Elizabeth Griego, the Abel-Sandoz program director.

Student supervisors on a work/study program will be instructed in teaching fitness and receive credit for the hours they contribute in helping residents to set up an individualized fitness program, she said.

Griego is working with the program's co-director, Robert Robertson, the director of the physical fitness research laboratory of the Nebraska Center for Health Education, in coordinating the program.

Griego estimated the cost of the center at about $5,000, but said the most costly equipment, the sauna and the weight machine, were installed some time ago from the complex's game room revenue. The center also will include a rowing machine, exercise mats and cycles, jump ropes and a "relaxing machine." she said.

The program is a model project, Griego said, designed to "upgrade the thinking about physical fitness and the need it fulfills for the student.'

Robertson said the concept of encouraging the students to use various campus facilities has not worked well. 'This program," he said, "will take the exercise facilities to the students.' Interested students will first be given a profile examination so the supervisors can advise the student where he or she should start in order to make best use of the equipment, Robertson said.

The program will be operated on a "drop in" basis according to Robertson, and is free for all Abel-Sandoz resi-

Move to Love-north in spring

By John Kalkowski

When Love-north, the new library addition, is finished in February or March of next year, the UNL Library System will have room for a growth period of at least 10 years, according to Gerald Rudolph, dean of libraries.

Upon its completion, he said about 500,000 volumes which have been stored in various places around the campus will be moved to Love-north.

By the time the move is completed, it is likely that not one book will be on the same shelf that it is on now," said

The move will also mean movements of volumes in the existing library buildings. Rudolph estimated that all one and one half million volumes in the library system will undergo some movement.

Movement systematic

The movement of the volumes will be systematic, and according to Rudolph, should take about six months to complete. He said it will depend on the climate conditions.

On days when the weather is bad, we will work inside the building, Rudolph said. "On good days we will be able to move volumes from the other buildings.

Rudolph said the addition is slightly less than half done. Provisions in the building's design show that two additional stories could be added to the building in the future. Two connecting stories between the existing and new buildings could also be added, he said.
According to Rudolph, the old Love library is an inappropriate building for a library. He said there are two major problems with the building: it is divided into too many small rooms and that no floor outside of the central stack area could support book stacks.

Mechanical remodeling

Plans call for $800,000 to remodel Love Library. But those funds will be for mechanical remodeling, such as installation of a new elevator and lighting systems, according to Rudolph,

"At this point? there is no money to put supports in Love Library, he said. He added that he hopes to squeeze some money for supporting pillars in Love Library within the next five years.

But Love Library is not the only building in the library system which needs structural support." Rudolph said. Morrill Hall Library also has reached a dangerous point. He is not sure what can be done, but he said that there will be some way out of it.

According to Rudolph, this semester has been a period of self-analyzing and staff reorganization. He added that there will be many internal changes in the library which will improve service.

Constant check Rudolph said a constant check is run on the hours during which the library is used most.

After receiving complaints from several students, especially graduate students. Rudolph said he would open any library building if it would be used. However, he added that instead of seeing a gigantic facility empty, he would like to see it bursting at the

If students are interested in seeing the library open at different hours, he said they should file a formal complaint. Then, he said, funding might be made available to experiment with different
