United Nations officials attend
Model program gets real thing

The Model United Nations program (MUN), sponsored for the eighth year by the Nebraska Union Program Council, will convene Feb. 4 with a general assembly of about 80 delegations.

Two representatives from the United Nations in New York City will attend the convention, according to Dean Kirby, secretary-general for this year's MUN. They are Steven Day of the permanent mission of the United Kingdom to the UN and Hiro Shibuya, a member of the UN Secretariat with the Economic and Social Council (ECOSOC).

Sam Jaffee, former ABC correspondent to Moscow and Hong Kong, whom Kirby described as "a China watcher when China was an object of mystery" will give the keynote address Feb. 5.

Registration down
 MUN registrations are down this year, Kirby said. About 20 delegations are still open. Kirby attributed decreasing registration to the additional day of the conference—MUN has lasted three days in previous years—and the $12 registration fee, a $2 increase over last year.

Kirby said MUN, which he described as "an educational endeavor to learn the various organs of the UN," is one of "the largest of its kind in the country."

Students registering for the conference pay the registration fee and preference the countries they wish to represent, Kirby said. Students receive background information on their assigned country before the conference begins.

MUN, Kirby said, "teaches the procedures and behavior of large representative bodies."

Teaches compromise, communication
 "It teaches people how to communicate, the nature of compromise and to embrace a point of view foreign to your own, thereby gaining perspective on other parts of the world."

The MUN general assembly will divide into four committees patterned after their UN counterparts, Kirby said—economic and financial committee, political and security committee, social humanitarian and cultural committee and the special political committees.

These committees, Kirby said, will be a "forum of world ideas."

Kirby said this year's MUN will try to avoid such topics as the continuing conflict in the Middle East and South Africa, which he called "the perennial UN topics that are talked to death." Topics on committee agendas include the human environment, world refugees and multinational corporations.

Scholarships
 Pending funding, Kirby said, two scholarships will be awarded at the end of the conference for outstanding individual delegate performances, one for a high school student and another for a college student. Plaques will be awarded for the outstanding performance by a delegation, he said.

Students can register for MUN "down to the last minute," Kirby said, but the remaining nations will be allotted on a first come-first served basis.

Students who wish to participate in MUN but cannot find enough people for a delegation may contact the Union Program Council for help.

Dean: Architecture space short

The College of Architecture is short of space, but has no intention of deserting Architecture Hall, said Dean W. Cecil Steward.

In a meeting today with the Central Planning Committee, a UNL advisory committee to the chancellor, Steward will present a 10-year plan including the uses for Architecture Hall, Richards Hall and the old Law College Bldg.

Steward said his objective is to get UNL officials to plan for the college.

have caused the space shortage, he said. This year, architecture has 506 students.

Currently the college uses Architecture Hall, and Richards Hall. It will move into the old Law College when the Law College moves to its new building on East Campus.

After moving into Law College, the College of Architecture plans to give up its space on the third floor of Richards Hall, but will maintain space on the first floor and in the basement, Steward said.

But even with the added 13,000 square feet, the college will be 6,000 to 7,000 square feet short of space, he said.

The college needs more design and planning studios where students can make models, he said. Part of this space will be provided by the third floor of the Law College, but more is needed, he said.

Steward said the college also needs an expanded branch library, visual media center, research and service labs, and more student materials storage.

Council approves electric, water hikes

By Shelley Peterson
 The City Council Monday approved rate increases for water and electricity users in Lincoln.

Exact figures for the water rate change, which goes into effect Jan. 24, cannot be established because water rates go down as a customer's water consumption goes up.

The new rates range from 14 cents to 25 cents per 100 cubic feet of water used.

Lee Blocker, Public Utilities Director, said the increase was necessary to finance new pipe lines and a new treatment plant in Lincoln.

The new Lincoln Electric System (LES) rate will go into effect Jan. 31.

A 10 per cent across-the-board hike will be charged all LES users.

Lincoln water customers will be charged based on water used during a 12-month period.

Three new rates were established to replace the present residential, commercial and industrial classifications.

The first includes customers using less than 12 million cubic feet of water, the second, those using between 12 million and 54 million cubic feet, and the third, those using more than 54 million cubic feet. Most residential users will remain in the first category.

Blocker said the lower fee for higher water usage is justified because it is cheaper to supply larger users than individual homeowners.

The vote to increase the water rate was 5-2. Councilmen Richard Baker and Max Denney voted against the proposal.

The last rate increase for LES of 13 per cent was approved in June while the last water rate increase was in 1969.
