

New class to dance through 50 years

A Square and Social Dancing class is being offered Tuesday evenings this semester by the Women's P.E. Dept.

The class meets from 7 to 9 p.m. in the East Campus Union and emphasizes social dancing, said the instructor, Marie Sanwick. One credit hour is given for the class.

Popular dances from '20s through '70s are taught on a demonstration and practice basis. An even male-female ratio is not emphasized Sanwick said, but there are openings for approximately five more women.

The drop and add fee has been waived for the course, Sanwick added, because the class was not advertised in the catalog. Grading is pass/fail and interested students should register for Sec. 124 No. C, Square and Social Dancing, call no. 9330, 9:00-21:00 Tuesdays.

Special UNO class begins

The University of Nebraska-Omaha (UNO) will begin a 12-week course for parents of handicapped children tonight, according to Aaron Armfield, chairman of the sponsoring Special Education Dept.

The course, which costs $5 per family, has "between seven and 10 families" preregistered but is accepting additional students the first two nights of the weekly class, according to Armfield.

He said parents will learn legal rights of the handicapped, what resources are available to them and what community programs exist for the handicapped. Parents will also learn how to evaluate educational programs for the handicapped.

Beyond that, Armfield said, "We're waiting to find out what everybody wants to learn and then we'll teach it. We're staying very loose."

In addition to the night classes, parents will be invited to attend regular classes in the department. As faculty guests who would receive no credit, "the parents will be exposed to some of the same materials that students are exposed to," Armfield said.

"We think the students should learn a lot because of the interaction with parents," he added.

Richard Galusha, principal of Omaha's J.P. Lord School for the Handicapped, will teach the course using funds from the Bureau of Education for the Handicapped.
