Colleges, TV offer course

A new course on "Human Relations and School Discipline" is being offered for college credit through five Nebraska colleges and universities in cooperation with the Nebraska Educational Television Council for Higher Education (NETCHE), according to Lee Rockwell, NETCHE executive director.

The course is broadcast over the Nebraska Educational Television Network. Two hours graduate or upper division credit is offered by Peru,

Wayne, Chadron and Kearney State Colleges and the University of Nebraska at Omaha (UNO).

Rockwell estimated about 325 people will register. The program began last Thursday, with 233 people registered, Rockwell said.

Fifteen authors will be guest participants in the lessons including Thomas Harris, author of I'm OK-You're OK, William Glasser, creator of Designing Success Strategies and Thomas Gordon, author of Parent Effectiveness Training, according to information provided by NETCHE.

The course deals with human relation problems in the classroom and is aimed toward practicing teachers who want graduate credit, Rockwell said.

The course is funded entirely by tuition and is not affiliated with the State University of Nebraska (SUN) program, Rockwell said.

"The difference between SUN and NETCHE, at least for this particular program, is that we're directed toward graduate level students," Rockwell said. "SUN appeals more to the person who may not have a college level education."

Credit requirements vary from institution to institution, according to Bill Raecke, NETCHE assistant director.
