Heritage Month paintings displayed

In conjunction with Black Heritage Month, the paintings and soft sculptures of black artist Faith Ringgold will be displayed until Feb. 21 in the Nebraska Union Main Lounge.

Ringgold will show slides and speak on black and feminist art Feb. 20 at 8 p.m. in the Union Ballroom.

"If black art is art at all, it must be expressive of some deep and pervasive truth," Ringgold said. "For the black artist in America, the most pervasive truth... is the unmovable reality that he or she is Black."

Ringgold described her painting as "super realism" with huge canvasses filled with people. They often express social themes, she said, especially in her "political landscapes."

Her painting style includes a system she called "black light," which involves using pure and deepened colors to create contrasts of intensity.

Her "polyrhythmical space" techniques are based on ancient African designs which require the viewer to approach the work from all directions, she said.

She divided her lifeseize soft sculptures into two series—"Family of Women" and "Dudes."

Ringgold, who considers herself a feminist as well as an artist, will hold an informal rap session Feb. 20 at 3:30 p.m. at the Culture Center, 16th and Y streets.

Lunchtime concerts begin today

Today at 12:10 p.m., First Plymouth Congregational Church, 20th and D streets, will inaugurate its series of lunch-time concerts. Titled "Eine Kleine Noonmusik," the concerts, each lasting one-half hour, will be presented today and on the next five Wednesday afternoons.

Today's program features George Ritchie, an assistant professor at the UNL School of Music, performing organ works by J.S. Bach, Dietrich Buxtehude, and Cesar Franck. The concert is free and open to the public.

A light lunch will be offered after each program at $1.00 per person.

IF YOU'RE THE FIRST TO FILL IN YOUR ID NUMBER, YOU WIN!

FILL IN TO WIN CONTEST

Starting Friday! The Daily Nebraskan is sponsoring a new contest for all you anonymous, computer-cataloged and numbered students out there. All you need to win is your University ID!

Here's how the FILL IN TO WIN Contest works. On certain days the Daily Nebraskan and a retail store will publish a contest ad with the first part of an ID number. Ten ID numbers that begin with those numbers will be on display at the sponsoring store. The first student to come in and match his or her ID with one on display wins a $25 gift.

FILL IN TO WIN. A new contest for all you numbered students out there.
