

Pre-student teaching designed as 'headstart'

In an effort to fulfill students' needs for experience with children before student teaching, the department of elementary education is offering a pre-student teaching experience program, according to Jim May, director of elementary education student teaching.

May said the purpose of the program is to provide a base on which students can assess their potentials as teachers.

He said the program is to help the students find out if they like and have the ability to work with children.

May said the pre-student teaching should develop more self-confidence and a "headstart" in student teaching.

In the pre-student teaching, May said, sophomores and juniors devote four hours each week to working with children under the supervision of a cooperating teacher.

He said each student is scheduled to work with a cooperating teacher two hours each session on either Monday and Wednesday mornings or afternoons or Tuesday and Thursday mornings or afternoons.

May said other arrangements for the sessions may be possible if scheduling complications exist.

Students participating in the program will enroll in Elementary Education 108, "Professional Laboratory Experience" for one semester hour of credit, he said.

May said the student is under the direction of the cooperating teacher and is expected to observe all aspects of actual teaching.

These include methods of instruction, use of textbooks and organization of the classroom, he said.

May said examples of pre-student teaching experience in which the student might be expected to become involved are: planning and arranging bulletin boards, assisting in the supervision of children during recess and reading stories to small groups of children.

Evaluation of pre-student teaching participants is done near the end of the semester by the cooperating teacher.

A delightful half hour of ballet acrobatic selected from an actual performance of the Peking Opera, which shows warriors of olden times in conflict, advancing and retreating, battling, and the historic outcome. More than stunts of skill and agility, this highly developed and sophisticated dance and music, which is the theatre of China, is pervaded by a sense of centuries, bringing back to life men and events which we have only a mythic awareness.
