

Law College—a moving experience

The UNL Law College is on the move. Monday marked the start of the moving process as staff members began packing the 130,000 volume library for shipment to the new building on East Campus.

According to Law College Assistant Dean Don Shaneyfelt, classes will be held in the new building on March 31.

However, Shaneyfelt said much work remains to be done, adding that "it might be nip and tuck to get chairs in the classrooms" by the 31st.

A large student parking lot is ready, but landscaping has not been completed, he said.

Dale Weber, purchasing manager for UNL Special Business Services, reported that the cost for moving faculty and staff equipment, papers and books will be $1690.

This phase of the moving operation has been contracted for by the Sullivan Transfer and Storage Company, and does not include the library.

According to Ray Coffey, assistant business manager of the UNL Business and Finance Office, the library books are being moved by Nebraska Book Company, a division of Lincoln Industries.

Coffey said the service is being provided as a "sort of donation" to the university. He estimated the service to be worth about $2500, and said details of the donation have not been completed.

Nebraska Book will be providing book carts and the trucks needed for the move, but all packing and unpacking will be done by university employees.

W. Cecil Steward, Dean of the College of Architecture, reported that beginning this summer the present law college will be used by the architecture faculty "on an interim basis and in 'as is' condition."

"We do not view it as a permanent position" he said.

Steward said the Architecture College plans to use the first and second floors, and will use all of the third floor for design studios. Other larger classrooms will be used for general university classes, Steward said.

Shaneyfelt said he is looking forward to moving to the new building, and added that some new programs will be initiated after the move, including a service of visiting professionals to talk with students and answer questions.
