

Devaney: athletics expansion unlikely

Memorial Stadium, the office complex/locker rooms beneath it and the Ed Weir outdoor track.

Among the top three sports which lost the most last year were track ($141,675 compared to an income of only $10,191), basketball ($84,455 deficit after an income of $169,950.18) and baseball ($70,279 while making only $2,103).

All of this is bad news for those programs that are currently sports clubs, and are asking for athletic department help.

Devaney said there is no possibility of the athletic department expanding into any other sports.

"We do not fund non-Big 8 sports," Devaney said. "I don't think any will be added; in fact, some could be taken away. The Big 8 has been meeting to try to cut down spending."

One proposal would limit football coaching staffs to 10 full-time assistants and four graduate assistants who would not be able to recruit. Nebraska now has 12 full-time assistants and four graduate assistants, all of whom helped recruit this winter.

Another proposal has been elimination of scholarships for minor sports such as tennis, golf, wrestling, gymnastics and swimming. Last year Kansas State proposed to eliminate such scholarships but then decided against it.

Rifle team

"Once we started funding one non-conference sport, the others would have a right to demand funding," Devaney said. "The only non-conference sport that had been funded up to two years ago was the rifle team."

"Adding more sports would also cut into and take away from our other programs," he continued. "One club is already getting outside contributions, some of which probably would have gone to other sports."

Devaney said the possibility of adding more sports has been brought up at Big 8 meetings of athletic directors, faculty representatives and presidents, but each time has immediately been tabled.

"Now nobody bothers to even bring it up," he added.

Athletic objectives

Current objectives of the athletic program, according to Devaney, are to raise some of the floundering minor sports to a competitive level, while trying to maintain the quality of the successful programs.

NOTE: The fiscal year ends each June 30.
