Graduation exercises return to Coliseum

Commencement exercises will be held in the UNL Coliseum, for the first time since 1964, on Saturday, May 10. Pershing Auditorium has been used for the ceremonies but was not available this year because of an earlier commitment to a national convention. After this year, the new field house will be used for the ceremonies, since the Coliseum will be converted to other uses.

An estimated 2,100 students, a figure similar to last year's number, will be graduated in two sessions. At 10 a.m. degrees will be conferred on students in the colleges of Agriculture, Architecture, Business Administration, Law and Teachers College as well as graduate students in each area.

Students in the Colleges of Arts and Sciences, Dentistry, Engineering and Technology and Home Economics, and graduates in these colleges, will receive degrees at 3 p.m.

Home economics club sponsoring projects

The Nebraska Home Economics Association (NHEA), a member of the American Home Economics Association (AHEA), has designated this week as statewide "Home Ec Week."

Wanda Henry, president of UNL's AHEA, said her group is sponsoring projects which she said show people that home economics is "more than just cooking and sewing."

"There is a total misconception that this is still all home economics involves," Henry said. She called UNL's program "extensive," and said it offers courses in human development and fashion design and merchandising.

Henry said this week marks the end of this month's NHEA membership drive. There is a booth in the new home economics building on East Campus where students can sign up to join the club, she added.

Henry, a home economics education and extension major, said students in NHEA baked cookies Wednesday night with residents of Lancaster Manor, a home for the elderly, and with children from the Lancaster Office of Mental Retardation (LOMAR).

The state convention will be held Friday and Saturday at the Omaha Ramada Inn. Henry said state professional home economists and home economics students from Nebraska colleges will attend.
