RHA exchanges strategies at national convention

With a little help from Resident Hall Associations Residence Hall Association (RHA) is getting new ideas on old problems.

Alcohol and visitation hours are still issues, said RHA Secretary Robin Buchman, but new ways of handling them were seen at the National Association of College and University Residence Halls convention in May.

RHA is a lobbying and activity coordinating organization for dormitory students.

For example, Buchman said schools across the nation handle alcohol in a variety of ways.

Restrictions considered

The decision for RHA is not whether it will work for alcohol on campus, she said, but with what restrictions it will present the alcohol-on-campus suggestions before the University of Nebraska Regents.

The various suggestions will have to be studied before deciding, she said.

Buchman said she was pleased that the Regents passed the extended 10 a.m. to 2 a.m. visitation hours but added that RHA will push for more visitation.

A request for extended hours in Centennial College, International House and the coed living floors in Abel Hall is being considered, she said.

Programs are new

However, RHA is hesitating to request extended visitation on the coed floors because the program is so new, she said. Evaluations submitted by the coed living floor residents and Complex Program Director agree that more hours would help the program, she said, but if any problems arose because of extended hours, the coed living arrangement would be endangered.

Centennial and International House are more established than the coed floors, she said, so they could probably stand a failure in extended hours without damaging the programs.

Not all additional hours to be pushed for in the future would be necessarily for room visitation, she said, but could be for longer visitation hours in halls and lounges.

Not enough students

Another visitation problem is the no-hour floors, said Buchman, because there aren't enough students to fill even one floor. Also, some students
