Volunteer help needed for disabled students

Disabled students are often given short shrift at UN-L, according to Shari Hier, communications director for Community Involvement Services (formerly the Student Volunteer Bureau).

Heir said UN-L is far behind universities such as Missouri that have complete service programs for disabled students.

Community Involvement Services is now trying to improve services for disabled students.

Heir said a first step will be recruitment of volunteers to assist disabled students, acting as readers and on campus escorts. Surveys of the buildings on campus need to be taken to determine which are obstacles for the disabled student.

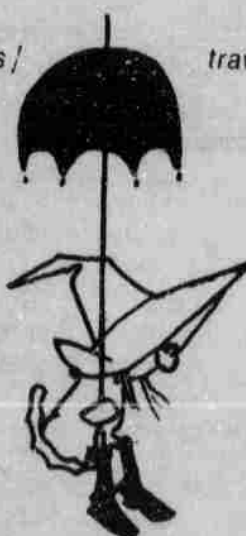

In a study released June 2, the Nebraska Division of Rehabilitation Services reported approximately 95 students with disabilities attended UN-L in the 1974-75 spring semester. This figure does not include the visually impaired.

In addition to volunteer recruitment, classrooms and equipment have been provided for use by the students and volunteers. Volunteers are needed for both summer and fall. Interested persons can contact Community Involvement Services for information on specific volunteer assignments.
