

Acupuncture belief rests on 'life forces'

The theory of acupuncture rests on the I Ching and Tao beliefs that there is a life force running through each of us, the 65-year-old doctor said.

Ways to violate this natural rhythm include anger, fear and other emotions which produce illnesses diagnosed usually as "psychosomatic" by Western doctors, Dhiagh said.

These types of illnesses account for 70 to 80 per cent of all sickness and are dealt with most effectively by acupuncture. The doctor described I Ching and Taoism and explained techniques of acupuncture but said he would never try to inflict his ideologies on someone else.

"One can get hooked on ideologies, just as one can get hooked on hard drugs," he said. "You are miserable in both cases."

The doctor urged his audience to rule out nothing in their quest for wisdom. There is wisdom everywhere, he said, not just in those things you can understand and describe. "If you reduce your reality to your intellect and five senses, you are cutting yourself off," he said.

In another reference to the university, the doctor said he was saddened to read in a local newspaper that students were denied participation in classes due to lack of space.

"This great institution should be able to devise a means to teach students what they wish," he said.

Dhiagh has never been to the country whose philosophies he practices. He said he would like to visit China for about a year. "I have no illusions, the creature comforts here are too enjoyable for me to want to live in China."
