

Pit Stop Fantasy spy trails autos

By Jim Williams

During the brain fever of checking-account starvation, I began to wonder. How had Campus Police discovered that an ordinary, anonymous automobile had been parked by a student instead of a real person? Strange fantasies began. . .

We're in the secret headquarters of the Campus Police, the nerve center, office of the enigmatic chief known only as "G". With a sinister hiss a secret door slides open, and in steps Parking Agent 007, immaculately attired in trench coat, slouch hat and rhino boots.

"We've got the goods on them this time, sir," says 007.

"Good, good," says G. "SPERSH (Students Parking Everywhere They Really Shouldn't) can't be allowed to get out of hand. But what's the evidence?"

007 unfolds a microdot and begins to read. "The vehicle is a 1971 Armadillo with leopard-skin bucket seats. On the seat we found a hair seven inches long."

"It could be a female's hair," says G. "Yes, sir," says 007. "But on the gas pedal, the lab found clear imprints of a Converse All-Star sneaker."

"Were any female basketball players visiting the campus that day?"

"No, sir. We checked. But there's even more. In the glove box we discovered two 'Incredible Hulk' comic books!"

"Good Gad!" gasps G.

"I'm afraid it's conclusive, sir. A long-haired, semi-literate, degenerate SPERSH agent parked that car."

"Good work, 007. We'll take it from here."

The great secret agent slips out the secret door, humming "Hail to the Team." A few seconds later he returns.

"Chief, do you happen to know what became of a tan Aston-Martin DBS in the lot?"

"Goodness yes, dear chap. It was in my parking space, so I had it towed away."

Merely sitting in the parking lot by the Nebraska Union, the little slab-sided econocar held no more immediate interest than a hole in the ground—except for a sticker in the back window reading "Non-polluting electric vehicle."

Are electric cars becoming practical? People doing mostly city driving might be interested. I'd like to meet somebody who owns an electric, drive it and talk about what it's like. Drop me a note at 34 Nebraska Union if you can help.

ASUN studies Yell Squad

The ASUN Senate Wednesday approved a resolution establishing a committee to investigate ways of putting more student input into the selection of Yell Squad members.

Senator Frank Thompson who introduced the resolution said one faculty member, physical education teacher William Murphy, was the only person who picked Yell Squad members.

He said 80 persons tried out for the Yell Squad last year, but that only eight girls were picked. He said of the eight girls on the squad, five of them came from two sororities.

Senator Tony Williams said many qualified people tried out for the Yell Squad, but that many were rejected.

"It wasn't what you did, but who you were," Williams said. He said student spirit on the UNL campus was "at a low ebb."

In other action, the senate approved a resolution forming a committee to investigate ideas for possible revisions of the ASUN constitution.

Senator Brian Schellpeper said the committee would attempt to change the law requiring 15 per cent of the student body to vote before the constitution could be changed. He said they would try to change the law to a certain percentage of students voting in the election.

The Senate also unanimously passed a resolution formally establishing a committee to investigate the Nebraska University Public Interest Research Group (NUPIRG). The committee was formed at last week's meeting and will report to the senate Nov. 5.

The senate also called for the testing site for Medical College Admissions Tests to be moved from the 501 Building to some quieter place, perhaps on the East Campus.

Deborah Lee was sworn in as the new senator representing the Home Economics school. It was also announced that Senators Quentin Bennett from Graduate School and Randy Pfeiffer from the Engineering School had resigned.
