

Fall meets give golfers a head start for spring

Fall competition is important for UNL's golf team, according to head coach Larry Romjue.

The Huskers compete in two fall golf meets each year, Romjue said. Last week the Huskers played in Oklahoma and Wednesday the team travels to St. Louis for a tournament.

Romjue said fall golf is probably more important to UNL than to other teams because "without it, we'd be playing tournaments in the spring without being outdoors at all."

"It (fall golf) also help me decide who to take on those early spring trips."

Placed 17th

The Huskers played in the All-College Invitational Sept. 27 in Oklahoma City, Okla., where they placed 17th of 19 teams.

Nebraska is led by returning starters Doug Smith, a sophomore and junior Craig Moyer. Both are "pretty well assured" of starting positions, Romjue said.

Steve Statten, a Lincoln freshman, was the Huskers' low golfer at the Texas tournament.

Romjue said junior Todd Thorson, who played in the Big 8 tournament last spring, and freshmen Tony Pesavento, Dave Donachie and Steve Sloan all have a chance to be one of Nebraska's top six golfers in spring competition.

The Huskers will participate in a tournament, sponsored by CompeteEvents, Inc., Thursday and Friday at the Boogey Hills course in St. Charles, Mo.

The tournament's field will include Southern Illinois, Austin Peay (Clarksville, Tenn.), Kansas, Bradley (Peoria, Ill.), St. Louis University, the University of Missouri at St. Louis, Arkansas, and Nebraska.

"Obviously the field there is not as strong as it was at Oklahoma City," he said. "I hope we can play better than we did at Oklahoma City. It's good to play in a tournament where you have a reasonable chance of success."

May be cut

Romjue said provisions to cut fall golf from athletic programs have come up at NCAA meetings, but haven't been voted on.

"Unfortunately, it may get to the point where we'll have to cut back on fall meets because of expenses," he said.

Romjue said lack of experience on his team and Nebraska's late spring weather makes fall golf important for the Huskers.

"It's hard for the young kids to get their feet on the ground competitively," he said. "Also, the weather makes us a have-not, as far as collegiate golf goes. Spring weather here is a problem and always will be."
