

Funds delay course guide

New course description booklets planned for preregistration this semester will not be available until next semester because of a lack of funds, according to Todd McDaniel, chairman of the Arts and Sciences Student Advisory Board.

McDaniel said the board plans to ask the UNL Teaching Council for money.

The booklets, which would be similar to the English Dept. course description booklets, will be planned and distributed by the advisory board.

They will be distributed to each living unit, the libraries, the Nebraska Union, each departmental office and all advisers.

McDaniel said the board asked each department to contribute the money spent on their own department booklets toward publishing one major booklet.

McDaniel said the advisory board will ask the faculty for more information to be included in the books such as testing procedures, call numbers and time and place of the class resulting in what he called a "one stop registration guide."

Omaha Mayor Ed Zorinsky, who says he "would like to run for the U.S. Senate" but has made no decision yet.

Mayor holds on Senate bid

Omaha Mayor Ed Zorinsky said he would like to run for the United States Senate, but he has made no decision yet.

Zorinsky said he would like to run for the seat being vacated by incumbent Roman Hruska, but hasn't decided "whether my future is in public service or private business."

Earlier reports said Zorinsky's father, president of the family vending machine business, wants his son to return to the firm after his term as mayor.

Zorinsky said displeasure with federal spending has prompted him to consider the Senate race.

"It's a frustrating thing for a mayor to maintain a budget of austerity and then to watch the federal bureaucracy," he said. "It can give away money faster than we can save it in Omaha."

Zorinsky, a registered Republican, would challenge Second District Congressman John Y. McCollister, Hruska's choice, in the Republican primary.

Former State Sen. Richard Proud also has announced his candidacy for the Senate seat.

The Omaha World-Herald said a preliminary campaign organization has been set up and awaits the mayor's final word. Zorinsky said he can depend on outstate help from friends in the vending machine business.

He began his political career when elected to the Omaha Public Power District Board of Directors in 1968. He defeated former Omaha City Council President H. Fred Jacobberger to win the 1973 mayoral election.

Teacher training organization

Dean nominated for national office

Robert Egbert, dean of UNL Teacher's College, has been nominated for election to the board of directors of the American Association of Colleges for Teacher Education (AACTE).

Election results will be announced at the group's annual convention in Chicago, Feb. 26 to 28.

According to Egbert, the Washington D.C.-based group consists of 800 to 900 teacher training institutions throughout the world. The board of directors, the group's main governing body, consists of 17 elected directors, the president of the group and the president-elect.

Egbert said a position on the board is an honorary, working position for which no salary is paid. Directors serve for three years.

Each institution in AACTE is designated a number of delegates based on the size of the school. UNL has seven delegates state representatives will meet about three times a year to discuss accreditation, certification of teachers and relations with the national organization, he said.

According to Ron Joekel, associate dean of Teacher's College, members of AACTE must be accredited, have a teacher training program and pay dues according to the school's size. UNL's Teacher's College pays $1,325 annually, who meet with other representatives to discuss general policy questions. Each institution is allowed one vote in the election for the board of directors.

"The goal of AACTE is to foster improvement of teacher education throughout the country," Egbert said.

Egbert said Nebraska has just organized a state unit of AACTE. Although the group will have no paid staff or headquarters,

UNL distributes maps in braille

Robert Van Neste, assistant director of the Office of University Information, is asking the university community to assist him in distributing a braille map of the UNL campuses to blind students.

He asks that any persons who know blind UNL students tell them of the map. Students may obtain a map by writing or telephoning the information office, 472-2167, Van Neste said.

Teacher's College board to offer student orientation

The Teacher's College Advisory Board (students and professors from Teacher's College), is sponsoring a new student orientation Wednesday from 7 to 10 p.m. in the Nebraska Union Centennial Room.

Advisory Board Chairman Molly Higgins said the orientation will feature booths from departments within Teachers College, advisers to explain Teacher's College requirements and several guest speakers.

She said students will be able to get preregistration packets for spring semester at the orientation before they are distributed around campus.

Although the program is planned primarily for freshmen in Teacher's College, Higgins said "anyone with questions is invited to attend."
