

Ag board cites removal of intercampus barriers

By Dick Hovorka

The Fees Allocation Board's (FAB) approval last Wednesday of a $1,000 request by the Ag Advisory Board to construct a bulletin board on East campus will not effect most people.

But Larry Rasmussen, president of the Ag Advisory Board, said the approval meant more than simply a bulletin board for East Campus.

"Students (East Campus) have a better appreciation of what goes on on the downtown campus. I have the utmost respect for the board," Rasmussen said. "I think we found out people on the downtown campus are reasonable."

He said East Campus students felt they were being discriminated against when it came to fees allocation. The Ag Board felt only one club which directly affected East Campus students, the Bar-M club, was receiving student fees. The club receives $100.

In the request, the board recognized that a major portion of student fees went to support of the University Health Center, East campus Union, Nebraska Union and other programs available to all students.

The process of acquiring a bulletin board for East Campus began in the spring of 1973, Rasmussen said. Students went through the Physical Plant and Dean's office in the College of Agriculture before applying to the FAB.

"Students are now enthused about getting involved in activities. They want to get involved in downtown Boards and activities," Rasmussen said.

Rasmussen said 52 students showed up at the FAB meeting in which the vote was 7-2-2 to approve the request.

One of the two dissenting voters, Doug Smith, said he wanted to wait for construction of the East Campus Union because there may be "duplication." He said he thought it was not FAB's place to approve a bulletin board but the Physical Plant's responsibility.

Students look for new market sites

Three possible new sites for Lincoln's Farmer's Market were considered in a project recently concluded by 12 UNL architecture graduate students.

The Farmer's Market has been located at 12 St. between N and O streets. Because of limited space and the possibility of construction of the Centrum block, between 11th and O streets, architecture professors Roger Schluntz and James Porter coordinated a design project for the students.

Porter said the project was designed to show other possibilities for locating the market, although the 12th St. site was "reasonably successful."

"The students worked in teams and focused on three locations for the market," Porter said. The sites were 11th St. between P and Q streets, 7th St. in front of the train station, and Haymarket Square, on 9th St. between N and O streets.

"The students treated the project from an imaginative and realistic standpoint," Porter said. "We were concerned with colorful, interesting and appropriate designs for a permanent site."

He said the idea was formulated in conjunction with Larry Jorgenson, Lincoln Center Development director. Jorgenson said he studied the Farmer's Market and discussed with Porter and Schluntz possibilities of different locations.

"Whether there will be a new market location is still debatable," Porter said.

Lincoln "is definitely going to have a Farmer's Market, but the present location may not be available," Jorgenson said.

He said he suggested Porter and Schluntz do a project in case the market has to be moved.

The students' design projects "were very well done," he said. Students presented their designs before a downtown advisory committee Oct. 18. The committee was pleased with them, Jorgenson said.
