

Competitors honoring United tickets

By Liz Crumley

"Thank you for calling Frontier Airlines. Due to a work stoppage on another airline, we are extremely busy at this time."

This recording, out of the Denver Frontier reservation office, is a result of a six-day-old continuing strike by United Airlines machinists during, what both Frontier and United Airlines call, their busiest season of the year.

International Association of Machinists (IAM) members walked out shortly after midnight Friday. Approximately 16,700 members, including mechanics, food service workers and ramp service workers, are involved.

Tickets honored

According to Harlan Franey, Lincoln's United customer service supervisor, United tickets that have been sold will be honored by other airlines, space permitting.

Frontier and Air Wisconsin are the other two airlines operating out of Lincoln.

If a United ticket is sold, Mark Himelick, Lincoln's Air Wisconsin station supervisor said, Air Wisconsin will honor it if space permits, and United will pay any additional fare charge. However, he said, if a person only has a United reservation, but has not picked up the ticket, he must pay the additional charge.

United is cancelling reservations that have been made for two days ahead and is accepting reservations for three days ahead, Franey said. This is based on hopes that the strike will end soon.

Bob Schulman, Lincoln's Frontier director of public relations, said many of Frontier's popular flights were almost full and suggested that students wanting reservations call immediately.

Omaha, Denver, Las Vegas

The Omaha, Denver, Las Vegas flight probably the most popular Frontier flight, he said, is almost booked full for the Christmas season.

Lincoln's Air Wisconsin has had about a 100 per cent increase in business, Himelick said, which he attributes to the strike.

Air Wisconsin mainly flies between Lincoln and Minneapolis, with connections to Chicago and other cities United serves directly, Himelick said.

Greyhound and Continental bus station personnel said stations have been busy, but could not determine whether it was because of the United strike. They added that Christmas is always a busy season.
