

Testimony in student misdemeanor case continues

Court proceedings will continue Jan. 14 in the case of Regina Edington, a 20-year-old UNL student charged with two misdemeanor counts of assault and battery.

Edington allegedly was involved in scuffles with UNL student Jeff Quackenbush and Campus Police officer Ron Lundy, Oct. 15 in the Nebraska Union.

Quackenbush testified in Lancaster County Court Thursday that he entered the union at 4 p.m. that day with UNL student Kelly Dotson through the north revolving doors.

Quackenbush said he "helped push the doors," while Edington was walking through the same door.

As soon as he passed Edington, she asked him, "What's the hurry?" He proceeded up the stairs and when they both reached the top, he said Edington started yelling, threw down her books, and said, "Are you laughing at me?"

Struck face

Quackenbush said he was "inside the rail" on the stairs inside the Union when Edington came up and struck him in the face. He said although he tried to cover his face, a few blows hit his face.

Quackenbush then testified he grabbed her hands, she broke the hold, struck him in the nose, and he slapped her.

Quackenbush, who said he was bewildered through most of the incident, said he first thought that Edington was a 14 or 15-year-old male.

Witness Catherine Brooks, a Union employee, said Edington and Quackenbush were standing about five feet from the desk and Edington was shouting obscenities and swinging her arms at Quackenbush.

Brooks said Edington was slapping and jabbing at Quackenbush and made the first blow by striking Quackenbush.

Identified jacket

She identified Edington as wearing a brown jacket and blue jeans, which conflicted with other testimony in which Edington was identified as wearing a blue jacket.

Under cross examination, Brooks changed her testimony and said she did not see Edington strike Quackenbush.

Judith Simynoe, a UNL student who was working at one of the booths in the north lobby, testified that she, like Quackenbush, was under the initial impression that both parties involved were male.

She said both Quackenbush and Edington were yelling and that Quackenbush seemed to be trying to calm Edington.

Simynoe said Quackenbush kept saying, "I'm sorry" and trying to walk away. Edington began swinging her arms and trying to hit him, Simynoe said, while Quackenbush was fending off blows. She said she did not see Quackenbush and Edington strike each other and did not notice blood on either person.

Officer Lundy, who was involved in an incident with Edington, will render testimony Jan. 14 along with several other witnesses.
