

getting ahead

Two UNL graduate students, Carolyn Grice of Omaha and C. Denise Jackson of Birmingham, Ala. have been awarded $1,500 Gretchen Bechtol Lee Fellowships.

Grice earned a bachelors degree from UNL in 1975 and is working toward a masters degree in journalism. Jackson received a bachelors degree from Jacksonville State University in 1974 and is studying for a modern language masters degree.

Nancy Stohs, a senior journalism major from Grand Island, was named winner of a $250 scholarship in the William Randolph Hearst Foundation Journalism Awards competition for November.

Stohs took the seventh place award in competition for her story on Hyannis, Nebraska and its one-time reputation as "the richest town in America." The story appeared in the Nov. 21 edition of The Nebraskan Reporter, the School of Journalism's laboratory newspaper.

The Hearst Foundation program awards 10 prizes each month to journalism students competing from 63 colleges and universities throughout the United States. In addition to the cash prize awarded directly to winning students, the Hearst Foundation provides a matching grant to the student's journalism school.

Wilma Crumley, professor and vice-director of the School of Journalism, has been selected for eventual leadership of the prestigious Central Region Agency, an organization of educators and advertising agencies.

At its Chicago convention, Crumley was elected to a two-year term as educator vice co-chairperson, Educator Committee. After this period, she will assume the post of educator co-chairperson for two years, sharing the chair position with an advertising professional.

The Central Region is one of the nation's largest organizations of advertising professors. Despite its Central Region designation, educational members come from throughout the nation.

Gail Louise Moats of Lincoln, working on a Ph.D. degree in Philosophy, is this year's recipient of a $750 Louise Pound Fellowship.

Financing sought for scholarships

The Faculty Senate Scholarships and Financial Aids Committee decided Jan. 13 to "pursue all ways" of getting the Academic Excellence scholarships financed, according to committee member Dewaine Alcorn.

The 10 Academic Excellence scholarship recipients would receive $2,000 plus tuition for two years, renewable upon satisfactory progress, according to the scholarship proposal presented to the Faculty Senate in December.

Currently there are two alternatives to get the money, he said.

"First we can try to get capital funding," Alcorn said, "That is, funds raised for capital improvement. The chancellors (of UNL, the University of Nebraska at Omaha and the University of Nebraska Medical Center) are making up lists of needs and we are trying to get on that list."

If financing came from this area, the money would not be available for two years as the request would be channeled through the NU Board of Regents and require the approval of the Nebraska Legislature before allocation, he said.

The second alternative is to request financing from the NU Foundation, he said. The money could be available in one year if obtained.

Six weeks ago no funds were available for these scholarships, said Herb Potter, corporate secretary for the NU Foundation.

The Foundation now gives the impression that the required money can be solicited from out-of-state sources, said Foster G. Owens, UNL animal science professor and committee chairman.
