Nursing college will be dedicated

Beds that fold up into the wall and double the room space at the new College of Nursing Bldg., will be among the things visitors can see Saturday, at the buildings dedication, according to Dr. Rena Boyle, college dean.

The 42,000 sq. foot building at 42nd and Dewey streets in Omaha, is on the University of Nebraska Medical Center campus.

Boyle described the $3,106,000 building as beautiful, yet extremely functionary. She said in addition to the folding beds, the building features seminar rooms for small group instruction and one large lecture room with a capacity of 225 that can be converted to three small rooms.

One floor of the building will house an independent learning center where students can go for self-instruction, she said. Student housing will not be available in the building which will be used for classroom and office space, Boyle said.

The new building will allow the College of Nursing to gradually increase its enrollment from 400 to 700. Fifty more undergraduates and 75 more graduate students will be taken this fall, she said.

Construction began two years ago after a three-year quest for funds, Boyle said. The Federal government provided two-thirds of the funds for the building, she said, and the state made up the difference.

The old College of Nursing building now is occupied by the Colleges of Pharmacy and Physical Therapy.
