

bill board | NU budget hearings continue Wednesday

Appropriations Committee hearings on the NU budget will continue Wednesday. Steven Sample, NU executive vice-president for academic affairs, was scheduled to defend the university's base budget last week but did not appear. The entire NU budget plan will be heard Wednesday.

Conflicting medical malpractice bills will be heard Tuesday by the Public Health and Welfare Committee. LB735, a committee bill, would liberalize statutes of limitations and benefits. Bellwood Sen. Loren Schmit's LB703, backed by medical associations, would limit benefits for malpractice claims.

Also Wednesday the Judiciary Committee will hear bills nearly completely overhauling the state criminal code. The committee also will hear Omaha Sen. Ernest Chambers' LB702, abolishing the death penalty in Nebraska.

Chambers' LB728, exempting food and food products from state sales and use taxes will be heard Tuesday by the Revenue Committee.

More writing is topic

The need to teach more composition in universities will be the subject of a talk Tuesday by the director of the Instructional Resource Center of the City University of New York.

Before her talk at 3 p.m. in Andrews 229, Mina Shaughnessy also will conduct private conferences with English faculty members, according to English Assistant Prof. Robert Bergstrom. Bergstrom said Shaughnessy, sponsored partly through a Teaching Council grant, specializes in large enrollment situations in which students come from a variety of backgrounds.

"We hope she can give us some advice on setting up writing curriculums," Bergstrom said.

Correction

In Third Dimension on Jan. 21, the Daily Nebraskan incorrectly reported that Mary Pratt, Birthright director said Birthright tries to give women an alternative route to abortion.

Although Pratt is the Birthright director, the person who made that statement was Connie Fouts, a Birthright volunteer.
