Bill proposes local mental health boards

LB806, to be heard Monday by the Nebraska Legislature's Public Health and Welfare Committee, would establish local mental health boards appointed by the presiding judge of each judicial district.

Each judge would appoint one physician, one lawyer and one of the following: a psychologist, psychiatric social worker or nurse or lay person with demonstrated interest in mental health issues.

Each board would have the power, upon information by the county attorney and other law enforcement officers, to conduct hearings on commitment of "mentally ill dangerous persons."

The bill generally allows more protection for a person who may be committed to a state institution. It also defines mentally ill dangerous persons as those who present "a substantial risk of serious physical harm to another person or persons within the near future . . . or harm to himself by evidence of attempts or threats of suicide . . . or inability to provide for his basic human needs."
