28 In the Veterinary Science Dept. the Livestock, Hygiene and Anatomy and Physiology courses have the highest enrollments, Dept. Chairman Marvin Twiehaus said. Neither course is required for majors, he said, but both are recommended. The Livestock Hygiene course teaches prevention of animal diseases he added.

29 In evening classes and correspondence courses, Introduction to Accounting 103 leads in enrollment, said Hal Allen, director of communication services. Last semester, 300 students enrolled in the night class of Accounting 103, he said.

Of summer reading courses, Allen said the most students—146—were enrolled in the Modern British and American Fiction courses.

Architecture, with 177 students enrolled in the class, said John Benson, assistant architecture dean. A good class for interested non-majors would be Architecture 106 or Architecture 308 which offer instruction in architecture as it is related to the environment, he said.

33 History of Mass Media had the largest enrollment in the Journalism school last semester, according to Neale Copple, director of the School of Journalism. The junior-level course, taught by James Morrison, had 191 students enrolled. Photography 175 is also a popular course, he said.

34 An estimated 2,629 students are enrolled in history classes this semester which is up from last semesters' 2,556 enrollment figure according to John Yost, vice chairman of the History Dept. This is unusual, he said, because the fall semester usually has a larger enrollment than the spring semester.

35 Marching Band had the largest enrollment last semester in the School of Music, according to John Moran, director of the school. During the fall semester, 158 freshmen and sophomores signed up for the 200 level marching band class and 63 juniors and seniors signed up for the 400 level class of marching band.
