New music plan

alters curriculum

By Virginia Broady
The UNL School of Music adopted a new program last fall, which eventually will change the undergraduate curriculum for music majors and minors, according to James Michel, UNL associate professor of music theory and dir-

The program, Comprehensive Musicianship (CM), integrates music theory, music history, instrumentation and ear training classes, Michel said. An expanded variety of music will be offered and students will become more tic periods, CM also will include the study of twentieth century, medieval and renaissance music, Michel said.

Jazz, pop, Oriental and African music also will be studied.

"CM will place more of a burden on the student be-cause things are not so neatly packaged," Michel said.

"Students will have to do more preparation on their own and put things together," rather than just attend classes, he said. Students will work more with music than before,

"It (CM) recognizes three important music behaviors," Currently, 109 students are enrolled in the program, he said. As these students progress through the School of Music, CM classes appropriate to their class level will be added and the courses they would have taken will be dropped, he said. Ten academic music classes will be replaced by 6 four- and five-hour CM, classes, he added.

program since the summer of 1973 when several Music

Theory faculty members returned from a CM workshop in San Diego, Calif., he said. The CM approach to music training originated in the mid-1960s, he added.
