

NU, Wesleyan coordinate social work conference

For the first time, the NU School of Social Work is coordinating efforts with Nebraska Wesleyan University for the annual Spring Institute of Social Work, April 1 and 2.

As part of continuing education for social workers, UNL students and faculty members in the NU School of Social Work and social workers from across the state converge on UNL's campus each spring for the conference, said Anne Coyne, this year's co-chairperson and a UNL Graduate School of Social Work assistant professor.

Erma McMurry, chairperson from Nebraska Wesleyan's Sociology and Social Work Depts., combined efforts with Coyne and NU's school to commemorate the 75th anniversary of social sciences at Wesleyan, Coyne said.

"Year of Social Sciences"

Coyne said because this is "the Year of the Social Sciences" at Wesleyan, the two schools decided to have the joint conference at Wesleyan's Fine Arts Bldg.

This year's theme is the law. Twenty workshops during the two-day period will explore the relationship between law and social work, Coyne said.

"Social workers need to become more aware of the law and the legal process," she said, "because many social problems can be helped by the law."

For example, Coyne said, Nebraska law allows the state to take a child away from his parents if there is evidence of child abuse, one of what she called the social problems.

The workshops, each chaired by a lawyer and a social worker, will feature speakers discussing potential problems and help for social workers, she said.

Mason to speak

Bruce Mason, attorney in the Horacek vs. Exon case, will be the keynote speaker at 10 a.m. Thursday, Coyne said. The case revolved around Gov. J. James Exon's wanting more persons allowed into the Beatrice State Home. As a result of an out of court settlement, the home's population decreased from 1,000 to 250 and allowed more of the home's residents to move out into the community.

Mason also was the legal adviser for the Human Rights committee of Nebraska Association of Retarded Citizens from 1972 through 1974.

Other workshop topics are: abortion, students rights, child abuse, consumer rip-offs, the right to treatment, euthanasia, the privacy act and the rights of tenants and landlord.

Coyne said the public conference has a reduced student rate, $7 for both days. Rates for nonstudents are $25 for both days of $15 for one day. Anyone wishing to register may do so at the conference Thursday morning.
