Book sale offers new leaves to turn

Textbook-weary students have a chance to stock up on more pleasurable volumes for summer reading.

The Lincoln City Libraries is conducting a book sale April 22 through 25 in the Bennett Martin Public Library auditorium, 14th and N streets, said Charles Dalrymple, director of city libraries.

Charles Dalrymple, director of city libraries. About 6,000 books ranging from how-to-do-it cook books to science-fiction titles will be on sale, Dalrymple said.

Proceeds from the fifth annual sale will go for general support of Lincoln's library system to promote good library service, he said.

Fiction, novels and children's books will be sold at what Dalrymp'e called "a real savings." Both paperback and hardback copies will be available, some copies costing as low as 49 cents, others up to $3. Some books will be singularly priced while others will be sold at group prices, he said.

Some books are extra copies which have accumulated during the last year and which the library does not have space to shelve, he said. Others are gifts and donations from people who bought best sellers to read once, he said.

The sale is a good opportunity to add to their home library collection, Dalrymple said. Students may be able to find some textbooks to use for background material, although current textbooks are not in stock or for sale, he said.

t clear king areas, ul of enforcement

"When I receive a copy," he said, "I will bring it to the Nebraska Union Board and ask them to reflect on it."

The board then will make recommendations as to where the designated areas for smokers would be, he added. Harley Schrader, Physical Plant director, said his department will attempt to persuade UNL college deans, faculty members and staff to support the regents' action.

Schrader said cigarette butts and ashes scattered throughout campus buildings increase cleaning costs. He admitted that enforcement will be difficult, but not impossible.

"It's hard to enforce if nobody wants to support it," he said.

Schrader estimated a 25 to 30 per cent savings from the custodial budget would be made if classroom smoking was eliminated. Specific dollar savings are not available, he added.

Schrader suggested persons smoke in lounges instead of classrooms.
