Variety of housing alternatives open this summer

A variety of living units will be offered for summer school students at UNL this year.

One residence hall, a cooperative, and seven Greek houses will be available to students attending summer school or working in Lincoln this summer.

Margaret Wenke, coordinator of residence contracts and assignments for the UNL Housing Office, said Smith Hall will be open this year for summer school students.

Housing costs depend on which summer session a student attends, Wenke said.

Pre-session rates are $83 for a double room and $126 for a single room, Wenke said. No meals are offered in the residence hall during pre-session, she added.

For the first five-week session, single rooms with meals are $272, and double rooms with meals are $221, Wenke said. Without. meals, single rooms cost $181 and doubles cost $130, she added.

Slightly higher

She said rates for room and board during the second five-week session are slightly higher than the first because residence halls are closed during the July 4 holiday weekend in first session, meaning fewer meals are served, she said.

During second session, single and double rooms with meals cost $276 and $225, respectively, she said.

Prices of rooms without meals for second session are the same as rates during first session, she added.

Smith Hall will be coeducational during the summer, with men and women on separate floors, Wenke said.

Although income made from summer housing is small, keeping residence halls open in the summer is profitable because "employes who work during the school year must be retained anyway," said Richard Armstrong, UNL housing director.

Double and triple rooms are available for women only for $21 a week at the Zeta Tau Alpha sorority house, according to Joan Boucher, summer house manager. Women may move in May 8, and rooms are carpeted and air conditioned, she added.

Men only

Theta Chi fraternity president Steve Messinger said rooms at his house are $10 a week for a double room and $15 for a single. The house only houses men and offers off-street parking and air conditioning on the first floor.

Acacia fraternity offers air conditioned, carpeted rooms, but no kitchen facilities, according to Glenn Cacek, summer house manager. Rooms cost $15 for a double and $22.75 for a single each week.

Summer rooms at Beta Sigma Psi fraternity are $60 a month, according to Keith Winter, fraternity member.

The air conditioned rooms are unfurnished, but have separate bathrooms.

Men and women may move into the Chi Phi fraternity house for $13 a week for double rooms and $15 for single, said Jere Detter, summer housing manager.

Triangle fraternity offers air conditioned single rooms for $20 and double for $15 weekly, according to Don Ellicott, fraternity member.

Cornhusker cooperative offers summer housing to males and females at $14 a week for double rooms and $22 for single, said Susan Kaup, membership coordinator. Persons may move in May 9, and the house is air conditioned and has a game room, she added.

CSL declines student definition

By Liz Crumley

After lengthy discussion on definitions of full- and part-time students, the Council on Student Life (CSL) Thursday refused to accept a report that urges definition of full-time students as those who are enrolled for seven credit hours.

CSL had established a committee to study the relationship between student fees and credit hour load. Council members said they were concerned with what they called apparent inequities between the amount of student fees puid and the benefits the students receive as a result.

Of specific concern, they said, is the Athletic Department's policy of selling student football tickets to those people enrolled for 12 or more credit hours, even though students carrying seven hours were paying full student fees of $61.50 a semester.

According to CSL member Chip Lowe, "part-time" students feel that the university is "getting them coming and going" by not allowing them to buy student football tickets. However, according to CSL member Ron Gierhan, when students pay full fees they are eligible for all activities that the fees support.

CSL members also said that because some federal and athletic regulations are based on the 12-hour, full-time definition, inequities still would exist if the definition was changed.

After the motion's defeat, CSL passed a resolution asking CSL chairman Lyle Young to send a letter to the chancellor asking him to recommend that the Athletic Dept. change its ticket policy and sell student football tickets to those enrolled for seven credit hours.

In other action, CSL passed a motion urging the Office of Student Affairs to supply the Fees Allocation Board (FAB) with student fees financial data as soon as possible.

This would allow FAB to become a part of the budgetary planning at an earlier date, CSL members said, and would not interfere with the spring allocation of student fees.
