

Summer school student fee lowered to $61.50 maximum

"While the revised fee assessment has eliminated some inequities, there is no way to make the student fee absolutely fair to each individual student."

Some UNL summer school students will get a pleasant surprise on their tuition bills this year. Summer student fees for certain credit-hour loads have been reduced.

No student will pay more than $61.50 in student fees this summer, said Ken Bader, UNL's vice chancellor for academic affairs. In past summers, students who took the maximum credit-hours during all summer sessions were assessed student fees of up to $80, he said. Student fees for a full-time student during the fall or spring semester is $61.50.

The reduced summer fee is a result of recommendations made by an ad hoc committee created by Bader last year to study the fee assessment policy.

In addition to reducing the maximum summer fee assessment to $61.50, the committee recommended that a reduced fee be assessed some students taking only field courses.

This summer students registered for a semester program which requires all classwork to be completed off the UNL campus and who do not live on the campus pay only that portion of the student fee used to defray debt service and facility construction or improvement. This amounts to approximately twelve per cent of the $61.50 maximum student fee.

Every UNL student must be charged for the debt service and improvement fee, Bader said. He explained that when the university assumed the obligation several years ago to build the University Health Center and the Nebraska Union, it guaranteed bond holders each student would be assessed every session to help pay off the construction debts.

While the revised fee assessment has eliminated some inequities, there is no way to make the student fee absolutely fair to each individual student, Bader said. "There are always going to be some inequities (in student fee assessment)," he said.

This summer's student fee schedule is as follows:

Hours Registered Per Session	Program and Facility Fees (Student Fees)
	3-wk. session	5- and 8-wk. sessions
