

High school students here this week to study fine arts

A series of convocations on the UNL campus, featuring about 235 students, are part of UNL's 1976 All-State High School Fine Arts Course.

The students are enrolled in music, art and dance programs during the two-week course. Classes are taught by UNL faculty members. All-State ends June 24.

Programs featuring the All-Staters include:
June 18, 7:30 p.m.—Dance, art and music performances, (location to be announced).

June 20, 7:30 p.m.—Swing Choir and laboratory band concert, Kimball Recital Hall.

June 21, 7:30 p.m.—Band and chorus, Kimball Recital Hall.

June 22, 7:30 p.m.—Dance recital and orchestra, Kimball Recital Hall.

June 24, 9:30 a.m.—Dance program, Women's Physical Education Bldg., Rm. 304.

June 24, 7:30 p.m.—All-State final concert, Sheldon Sculpture Garden.

All-State is designed to give high school students an opportunity to study in a university setting, according to Gary Neuhaus, All-State director.

Many All-Staters who eventually enroll in fine arts majors at UNL or other schools attribute their choice of study in part to experience gained in programs such as All-State, he said.

Introductory fine arts programs are offered at many schools, Neuhaus said, although the duration and courses of study vary. Kansas State University has a six-week program, and Wayne State College offers a one-week debate program, Neuhaus said.

Almost all of this year's All-Staters are from Nebraska, and the enrollment is about the same as in 1975, Neuhaus said.

Each All-Stater enrolls in one area of study. Tryouts determine a student's placement in the orchestra and the band, in vocal groups and in dance formations. Students may also receive private lessons from UNL faculty.

Neuhaus said although the All-State program is more than 40 years old, the present course in music, dance and art has been offered since 1968.

Journalism used to be offered, he said, but journalism, speech and theater courses were dropped last year because of declining enrollment.

Pam Rosenau, left, auditions for placement in the All-State Swing Choir. Accompanying her are All-Staters Pat Rosenau and Michelle Zieg. All three are from York.
