

Taco Inn to replace bookstore

Tacos, burritos and enchiladas will replace the textbooks which were once sold at 1245 R St.

Taco Inn is scheduled to open Aug. 1, according to Roger Leising, manager and part-owner. Campus Bookstore closed last winter, leaving the building vacant for a semester.

Leising said Taco Inn will be a fast-food restaurant with about 10 items on the menu. The food will be made fresh when it is ordered, he said.

"The fast-food operation will make it possible for students to stop in between classes," Leising said, "since customers won't have to wait very long for their food."

The new restaurant is a local corporation owned by himself, Jim Kamos and Don Leising, Leising said. The property was already zoned for commercial use. The building is being leased from the Nebraska Book Company.

Leising said it will take from $15,000 to $20,000 to turn the former bookstore into a restaurant. Plumbing will be installed, the electric wiring will be re-wrapped, and restaurant fixtures will be installed, he said. Taco Inn will seat about 100 persons, Leising said.

The restaurant must pass health codes and building inspections before it opens, he said.

Hiring of restaurant personnel will begin July 15, Leising said. About 15 positions will be available, he said, but the number hired will depend on how many positions will be part-time.

Leising said a parking lot behind the restaurant may be available in the fall, but right now the only customer parking is along the city streets.

Tentative business hours are 10 a.m. to 2 a.m. Monday through Saturday, Leising said. Taco Inn also will be open on Sunday, but the hours have not been determined, he said.

Reduced budget...

An extra $45,251 was cut from the budgets, Johnson said, to create a contingency fund for unexpected costs.

All educational and student services on the UNO campus will feel the impact of the budget cut, said John Moore, director of budget and operations analysis at UNO.

Departments have complained that they do not get fast, accurate financial statements, he said. They will have to live with this for at least another year, he added.

The money spent for office supplies and postage will be reduced, Moore said, and students may not receive mid-term grade reports. Money for new equipment was cut completely from the budget, he said.

"Students and faculty will just have to wait," Moore said, describing the effect the cuts will have at UNO.

The physical plant operating budget was also reduced $500,000 by the Cavanaugh amendment. UNL's share of that cut is $313,922, Johnson said.

Among the services reduced will be snow removal, said Miles Tommeraasen, UNL vice-chancellor of business and finance.

If a snowfall next winter is less than three inches, it will just lie there, he said.

Tommeraasen said that during the winter of 1974-75, UNL spent over $90,000 on snow removal.
